Mediators continually need to adapt their practice to a changing socio-cultural landscape with increasingly diverse and fluid relationship structures.

This CPD event aims to increase mediators' knowledge and understanding of consensual non-monogamous relationships (CNM). Mediators will go on to consider how mediation can support separating parents and their children when these relationships breakdown.

This session will address the following questions through presentations, handouts, pair conversations, and case scenarios.

- How do mediators take into account co-parenting arrangements and children's views when multiple-partnered relationships break down?
- Do they know how to invite metamours and 'chosen family' into mediation discussions?
- Do they understand the values of polyamorous connections?
- Are they aware of the importance of community and the effects of minority stress on people in relationship structures that society does not acknowledge?
- Have they considered the bias against open and polyamorous relationships within the legal system and other regulatory structures?

Niki aims to support mediators in becoming aware of their own possible biases and gain knowledge about the specific challenges and opportunities for separated parenting in relationally diverse ways.

Learning Outcomes: By the end of the day participants will have:

- Increased understanding of diverse relationship styles.
- Gained insight into the most common issues that lead to break-ups for people in open and polyamorous relationships beyond the standard reasons any relationship ends.
- Knowledge of Niki D's 7-STAGE MODEL of co-creating an open relationship and consider the learning in a mediation context.
- Awareness of how mononormative bias in the mediator or client may arise in the mediation session.

Presenter: Niki D is an existential psychotherapist and supervisor with over thirty years of experience in private practice, statutory and voluntary sectors. She runs a supervision group, GSRD therapy groups, and a therapy group for therapists.
